STEVENSON'S MISTAKE

IT seems most unfortunate to us that Mr Adlai Stevenson, with his eye on the next Presidential election, has announced to the American people that U.S. leadership has failed. What is more, Mr Stevenson says it has failed for the very reasons which we, as onlookers, consider it has succeeded.

Mr Stevenson has said that things got so bad under the Republican administration that Mr Eisenhower found it necessary to invite Mr Khrushchev to the United States. This is followed up by the statement that Mr Eisenhower is trying to restore American prestige and leadership by undertaking his present tour.

Against Grain

THAT is not the way we see it at all. It certainly seemed to go against the grain with many Americans when Mr Eisenhower invited Mr Khrushchev to the States. Yet that visit is interpreted by most people as the greatest single factor contributing to peace undertaken by American diplomacy during this year.

It is quite possible that posterity will rate it the finest piece of international statesmanship ever undertaken by the Americans. Regarding the President's tour, we find everywhere Mr Eisenhower goes, he is met by admiring and cheering crowds, and his message of goodwill is an inspiration to everyone.

Domestic

WE know that American domestic politics are a robust affair. We know there is hard hitting, and we know that both the Republican and the Democratic parties are out to seek the chink in each other's armour.

But there is a change of mood among the peoples of the world. Whether they like it or not, the world has become a bigger place than the state or country of their birth.

And although domestic politics are of immense interest with their emphasis upon taxation, utility projects, the business of survival because of increasing interest as the people of the world become more aware of the dangers of division.

Mr Stevenson should take a peek at Britain's last election. No small part of the Labour Party's crushing defeat was due to the fact that Mr Gaitskell attempted to divide the country on an international issue, and thereby placed party interests before the needs of the people.

Similar Mood

MR Stevenson could find the people of the U.S.A. in similar mood, for over and above everything, there is a need for better international understanding. Mr Eisenhower, by his wise and bold leadership has contributed to world peace in a measure that would have been thought impossible in the States a few years ago. Domestic issues are small trifling affairs in comparison with this necessity for peace. And no factor is as powerful for peace as to hear the United States of America speak with one voice.

JOCKEY CLUB MEMBER ORDERED REINSTATED

Appeals Against Expulsion

A Chinese merchant today successfully appealed to the Supreme Court against his expulsion last year from the Hongkong Jockey Club.

Mr Justice Blair-Kerr ordered that the man, Chan Ching-man, be reinstated and told the Jockey Club to pay costs.

Mr John McNeill, QC, for Chan, told the court Jockey Club stewards had expelled Chan in July last year for misconduct.

"The resolution they passed was completely void," said Mr McNeill.

"The Club also issued a statement to the Press which was damaging to my client."

Statement

The statement, printed in the South China Morning Post on July 23, said that stewards had inquired into the ownership of the ponies Dragonfly, Free Success, and Advance.

"They were satisfied that the ponies had been registered and were in the name of a member while they were actually the property of a non-member."

The statement said that Chan had therefore ceased to be a member of the club. Chan claimed in his court affidavit that on May 30 last year he had received a notice from the Secretary of the Club asking him to attend a meeting on June 3.

No Reason

No reason was given. He attended the meeting, and questions were asked about the ponies.

On July 17 he was told he had committed a breach of the rules and was expelled from the club.

But, said Chan, the article under which he was expelled, provided that where a member is accused of a wilful breach of the rules he must receive at least seven days notice by letter, informing him of the stewards' intention to hold a meeting to discuss his conduct.

The letter also must inform him of his right to be present in person at the meeting, and his right to call evidence and address the meeting on his own behalf.

Not Complied

Chan said none of these rules were complied with.

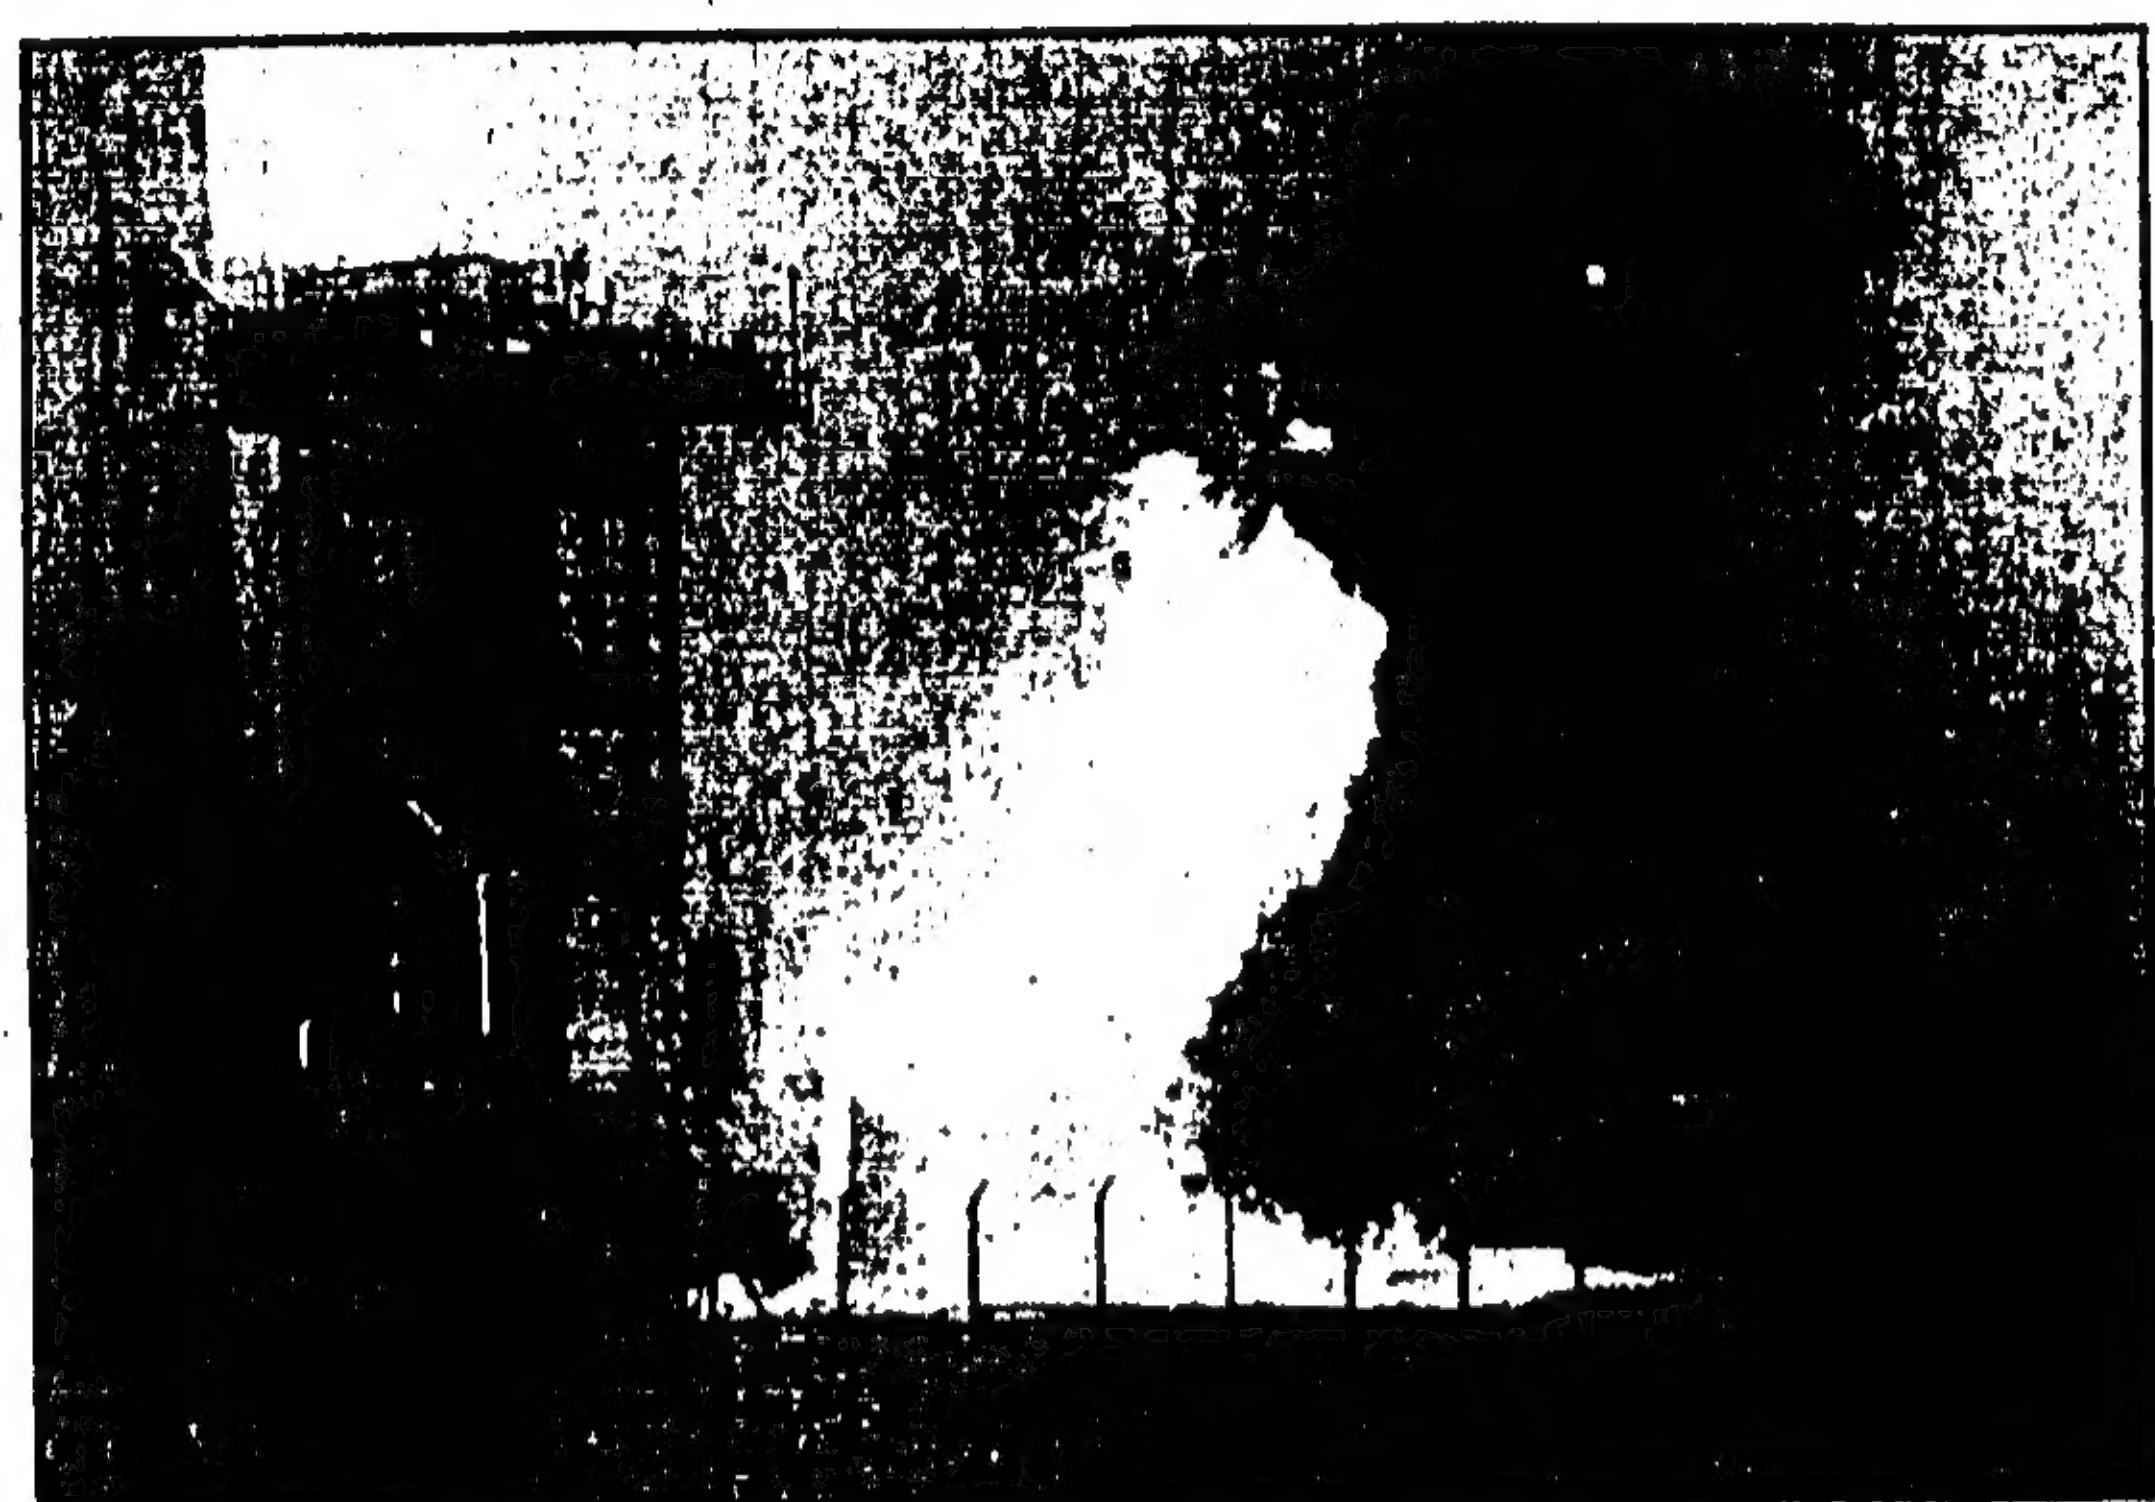

Mr D. A. Wright, for the Jockey Club, admitted the technical requirements had not been strictly followed.

"The stewards thought they were acting in the best interests of the club," said Mr Wright.

Named as defendants in the action were: Mr D. Benson, Mr H. D. M. Barton, Mr D. Black, Dr S. N. Chau, Mr D. B. Evans, Mr J. F. Macgregor, Mr A. H. A. Penn, Mr A. H. Fott, Mr W. T. Stanton, and Mr M. W. Turner.

Mr McNeill was assisted by Mr Brook Bernacchi.

A Fiery Reminder Is Seen

A few yards from the roadside near Hatfield, Hertfordshire, a burst of flame lights up the dusk of the December evening, proclaiming the captive firing of a 70 ft Blue Streak missile, Britain's H-bomb rocket. A restraining harness prevents the rocket rising or toppling. The security fence of chain link and barbed wire keeps out too closely prying eyes; but the Aviation Ministry has ruled "no security" on what can be seen from the road.—Express Photo.

Makarios Elected As Cyprus' First President

Nicosia, Dec. 14.

Archbishop Makarios, 46-year-old peasant's son, and head of the Greek Orthodox Church in Cyprus was tonight proclaimed first President of Cyprus shortly to become an independent republic.

The final result of yesterday's presidential election gave the Archbishop 144,501 votes to 71,753 for his opponent, Mr John Clerides QC, candidate of the right wing Democratic Union which had an electoral pact with the Communist Party Akel.

As people crowded into the streets and churchbells rang in celebration, the bearded, black-robed President-elect delivered a proclamation appealing for an end to fanaticism and antagonism.

Speaking from the balcony of the Archbishopric, he declared he had no political ambitions for himself.

He called for co-operation between the island's Greek and Turkish communities, placing himself "in the Cypriot peoples' service" irrespective of parties or class.

He paid a warm tribute to the gunmen of the Eoka terrorist organisation and said: "I kneel with deep reverence before their holy graves... it was their sacrifice which engraved the road to national duty in front of us."

No Victors

Addressing thousands of cheering Cypriots, Makarios declared there were no victors or losers at this juncture in Cyprus' history.

"I repeat I have no political ambitions," he said.

"I am convinced that at this vital juncture in the history of our country, it is my duty to place myself in the service of all Cypriot people independent of political and social standing."

"I have never identified myself, and shall never do so, with any particular party or political movement, but I shall be of service to the whole Cyprus people on whom I call today to work united for our national reconstruction."

"Let us do so without differences, without prejudice, passion and discord. The common struggle for freedom has brought us all so closely together that no force can drive us apart."

National Duty

"At this moment there are no victors or losers. Above everything comes the national mandate and duty. Above all is our country. Let us take each other's hand and devote ourselves all united to the task of peaceful reconstruction."

"I declare I shall never cease devoting myself in serving your rights and interests. I know the task is heavy and the responsibilities are immense. We are going through a critical and very dangerous stage of our history and it would be an act of desertion to abandon this responsibility and task at this difficult moment."

The vast crowd in Archbishop Square in Nicosia produced waves after waves of thunderous cheers mingled with rolling drums, music and the thud of giant firecrackers as the Archbishop appeared on the balcony to hear his proclamation announced.

He waved his right hand for minutes and acknowledged the crowd's response with tears in his eyes.

After the Archbishop's speech thousands roamed the streets, singing and dancing to celebrate the day Cyprus had been waiting for for hundreds of years.

The first man to congratulate the Archbishop was the Governor Sir Hugh Foot, who stood by his side as the presidential proclamation was read.—Reuters and AP.

Trial Run Of Bridge Survey

A trial run of the traffic survey for a possible cross-harbour bridge was carried out on board vessels of the Star Ferry Co. yesterday.

Between 3 p.m. and 6 p.m., passengers were interviewed and asked questions with regard to origin and destination and means of transport on their trips.

Mr J. O. Tresidder, the expert from the Road and Traffic Research Laboratory of the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research, U.K., led a few officers and three interrogators with co-operation of Traffic police.

They selected 12 passengers on each trip for the test queries. Many passengers were very cooperative while some turned down the questions.

The trial run was made to find out how the survey method would function. A full scale traffic survey gathering information for the cross-harbour bridge will swing into force early in January.

DIVERSION OF TRAFFIC THROUGH DOCKYARD

To relieve rush hour congestion of traffic in Queen's Road East where the tram tracks are being relaid, east-bound traffic coming from Connaught Road to Wanchai, will be diverted through the Royal Naval Dockyard area between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. today and tomorrow.

The diversion will begin at Murray Road, a Police Traffic Branch spokesman said this afternoon.

Motorists proceeding to Wanchai are advised therefore to travel by way of Connaught Road and keep to the near side lane. Traffic branch officers will be on duty to assist.

The spokesman said that the section of Queen's Road East on the northern side between the naval terrace and the Union Jack Club is expected to return to normal for motorists travelling in the direction of Wanchai on Thursday morning.

ACCIDENT MARS IKE'S ARRIVAL IN ATHENS

Athens, Dec. 14.

A heavy iron railing atop a wall collapsed yesterday on scores of cheering Athenians marred President Eisenhower's triumphant arrival into the city.

Police announced that 19 persons had been injured, eight seriously. However, two Athens hospitals and a first aid station reported a total of 43 persons hurt. Eight were said to be hospitalised with serious injuries.

NO DEATHS

Police and hospitals said no one was killed.

The accident occurred two or three minutes after President Eisenhower and King Paul passed the spot.

In the evening, President Eisenhower was the guest of King Paul and Queen Frederika of Greece at an informal dinner. At the dinner, Mr Eisenhower offered a special birthday cake to the King in honor of his 58th birthday. King Paul presented Mr Eisenhower with two gold replicas of Mycenaean cups.

Police said tonight 31 Communists were arrested on Monday for demonstrating against President Eisenhower.

A group of 450 Communist detainees—former members of Communist guerrilla units—tonight addressed a letter to President Eisenhower asking him to exert his influence with the Greek Government for the granting of a general amnesty.

"In application to Greece of the spirit of relaxation of tension inaugurated at Camp David" (where the President met Mr Khrushchev earlier this year). The detainees are being held at the Island of Aegina.—AFP.

Bandaranaike Murder Trial Starts

Court Hears Allegation

Colombo, Dec. 14.

A Minister of State was alleged in court here today to have used his official position to obtain police documents in connection with inquiries into the assassination of the former prime minister, Mr Solomon Bandaranaike.

The allegation was made by a defence counsel before the chief Colombo magistrate, at the opening of the inquiry into the case.

Somarama Thero, a Buddhist monk, is accused of the murder of Mr Bandaranaike, who was fatally shot at his Colombo home on September 25.

SIX ACCUSED

Six other people are accused of conspiring with Thero to commit the murder—Mapitigama Buddhadasa Thero, chief priest of the Buddhist temple at Keliyaya; Mrs Vimala Wijewardene, former Minister of Housing; police inspector Newton Perera; Afara De Silva, motor mechanic; H.P. Jayawardene, businessman; and Amarasinghe.

Counsel who made the allegation, Mr C. S. Barr Kumarakulasinghe, appearing for Mrs Wijewardene, told the court he was not blaming the police.

"But this, coming on the heels of a rather disturbing allegation by the Prime Minister himself, Mr Wijayananda Damanayake, that there has been political interference in this case should be noted," he said.

Counsel identified the minister as the Minister of Justice, Mr Valiella Jayatilaka. The magistrate, Mr N. A. de S. Wijesekera told counsel he would call for the documents in question.

PARDON ASKED

Counsel for one of the accused, C. Amarasinghe Ayurvedie, said his client was willing to assist the prosecution and make a full disclosure of the circumstances if he was given a pardon. The court directed the counsel to contact the Attorney General.

Mr A. C. M. Amerc, deputy Solicitor General, who is leading the prosecution, said there were 800 witnesses on the list. Strict security measures were taken to guard the court premises and admission to the court was restricted. The hearing was later adjourned until tomorrow.—Reuters.

ALLEGATION AGAINST PI DEFENCE SECRETARY

Manila, Dec. 13.

President Carlos P. Garcia today ordered the investigation of Defence Secretary Alejo Santos for alleged violation of the Philippine customs, trade and quarantine laws.

Opposition Liberal Party Vice-President Diosdado Macapagal denounced Santos following the Cabinet member's 10-day trip to British North Borneo.

Santos left on December 1 for Borneo to check the rampant smuggling reported going on between southern Philippines and the British territory. Macapagal charged that Santos took a party of 45 civilians, including Manila newspapermen and society matrons, on the official trip.

He said the Philippine Navy vessel used by Santos and his entourage ferried dutiable goods on its return to Manila. Macapagal claimed Santos and his group by-passed customs inspection and that they did not follow the quarantine laws.

Santos has said that customs and quarantine inspectors boarded the vessel when it docked at Manila's north harbour.—UPI.

SOLD SCOTCH FROM SHIP'S STORES

New York, Dec. 14. The heavy flow of liquor on a pier caused a liquor hanger yesterday for a British ship's store.

George Goughly Jackson, 51, steward on the freighter Censulose Prince, was fined $100 for selling nearly 600 bottles of Scotch from the ship's store to American dock workers. The thin, white-haired Jackson told this story: While his ship was in Hongkong, there was a substantial theft from the liquor stocks. To try to square his accounts, he decided to sell some of the remaining stock here at above-shipboard prices.

By offering Scotch at two fifths for five dollars, he could make a substantial margin above the untaxed shipboard price, but it was still a bargain for American customers. When customs officers noticed numerous knapsacks carrying lag bottles under their jackets, they checked up, found the freighter's liquor stores, sealed in port to prevent untaxed sales, had been opened. Jackson pleaded guilty to breaking the seal, and illegally selling untaxed liquor, and was fined $50 on each count.

He thanked the judge for the light sentence, and for making it possible for him to sail for England with his ship. "I'll be the best Christmas I've ever had," he said, "to be able to be home."—AP.

Chessman's Appeal Denied

BUT HE WILL MAKE ANOTHER APPLICATION

Washington, Dec. 14. The Supreme Court today denied another hearing to Caryl Chessman, who for 11½ years has been forestalling death in the gas chamber.

The brief order means California is again free to carry out the execution. The former "Red Light Bandit" of Los Angeles had asked the court to either free him permanently or grant him a new trial.

One of Chessman's lawyers said today that a further appeal would be made to the United States Supreme Court for a re-examination of Chessman's trial.

Chief Justice Earl Warren, a former Governor of California, took no part in the deliberations. Seven execution dates have been set for the convict, the last one was on October 23. But on October 19 the Supreme Court granted him a stay of execution so he could file another appeal. His case has been before the High Court 12 times before.

Chessman was convicted under California's "little Lindbergh law" in 1948 on 17 counts of kidnapping, robbery and assault. During his years in solitary confinement he has written novels including a best-seller, "Cell 2455 Death Row." He is now 38. The condemned man's latest appeal raised 14 legal points. They included the assertion that 11½ years was "excessive punishment" and that "Death Row" was a "barbaric institution."

constitutes the kind of "cruel and unkind punishment" forbidden by the Constitution.

The main argument was Chessman's challenge to the accuracy of the trial record.

The court reporter died shortly after the trial ended and his notes were transcribed by a substitute.

Chessman claimed the notes were illegible. He said he has been denied his right of an accurate record for use in appeal.

Colonel Holds Up Man In New York; Pleads Diplomatic Immunity

New York, Dec. 14. A Venezuelan colonel jabbed a loaded pistol into the stomach of a stranger on a Manhattan street today by evaded possible criminal proceedings by pleading diplomatic immunity.

Police said that "immunity" apparently was one of the few English words in the vocabulary of Col. Esteban Rodriguez, and he shouted over and over as he was led into a Police station.

The arrest of the colonel, who arrived here yesterday on a diplomatic mission, marked the third case in recent weeks in which a person associated with a foreign embassy has used diplomatic immunity to escape possible criminal proceedings. Roman Rojas, Venezuelan Consul in New York, said Rodriguez was travelling on a valid diplomatic passport. He said the colonel's automatic was "a very small gun—just like a toy." But that it was unusual for a Venezuelan diplomat to carry any guns at all while in New York.

"I have enemies," Rodriguez muttered as he was taken to the nearest Police station. —UPI.

Portsmouth, Ohio, Dec. 14. A 41-year-old father of nine refused to explain today why he drunkenly grabbed two of his young children and leaped from a six-foot bank into the swirling waters of a river and drowned them.

Two charges of first degree murder were filed today against Alfred Scarberry, of nearby Sciotoville, who admitted drowning his infant sons in the water, then swam to shore himself after sobering up in the cold water.

Sheriff's Deputies arrested Scarberry in Portsmouth Receiving Hospital shortly after the tragedy. He would not tell Police at first what he had done with the children, and search parties were organized to comb fields near the home.

Later he confessed to drowning his sons, Kenneth, 2½ and David Lee, 10 months.

Scarberry told Police he came into his house on Saturday night after a drinking bout and kicked over a stove in an attempt to burn down the house.

He then carried the children, one under each arm, and leaped into the frigid waters of Little Scioto River. —UPI.

Good Prospects For Improved UK-Egypt Trade

London, Dec. 14. Dr Abdul Khashany, Minister of Economy of the United Arab Republic, said in a recorded television interview here tonight that there were good prospects for improved trade between Britain and Egypt.

Dr Khashany was appearing in a report from Egypt by the British Broadcasting Corporation's commentator Robin Day on the Egyptian reaction to resumption of diplomatic relations with Britain.

He said: "In the past, trade between our two countries some times reached £40 million a year on each side. Recently the level has been much lower but I hope it will now rise again. The pattern of trade will no doubt be different from that of the 1940's but there is no reason to think the volume will not increase."

The editor of the Cairo newspaper Al-Ahram, Mr. Mohamed Hafeez Heykal, who was also interviewed by Mr. Day, said that Egypt was "ready to start a new page" in her relations with Britain.

"We want you to understand us as we feel you do not at the moment."

MOORHOUSE CASE

Commenting on reports of the establishment of a "Moorhouse Museum" in the house where the British Lieutenant Anthony Moorhouse died during the 1958 Suez action, Mr. Heykal said: "The Moorhouse business was organized by the people who carried it out at a time of high emotion when their country was subjected to aggression."

Commentator Robin Day, summing up his impressions of his visit to Egypt, said at the end of the programme: "On the whole, people in Egypt feel friendly towards Britain. Egyptian hates and fears today are directed towards Israel. But she also sees a second possible enemy in Communism."

"Nasser sees a lot to gain in closer ties with Britain—provided they do not have any strings attached." —Router.

Nineteen bodies have so far been recovered, and West German newspapers today praised the timely help of British troops in rescue operations. A British military spokesman told how sergeant A. P. "Copper" Brown forced his way into a cellar almost covered with debris where he saw the bodies of a woman and child.

"REFUSED TO LEAVE" Despite warnings that the shattered remnants of a wall balanced precariously above the cellar might collapse any second, Sergeant Brown struggled to where the bodies lay and refused to leave until he had ascertained the two were dead.

"Sergeant Brown showed complete disregard for his own safety," the spokesman said. Eight people were injured in the disaster, thought to have been caused by a gas explosion. —China Mail Special.

A Campaign To Enforce Winter Heating Order

IN New York, city of central heating, the fireplace is unknown except as an ornament. Yet more than 250,000 people will huddle round makeshift oil-heaters as the temperature drops below freezing this winter.

Landlords are required by law to install effective heating in any building which houses more than three families.

But in New York's shameful slums the landlords have been dodging the law for a year.

This winter, 300 housing inspectors will make a door-to-door check to crack down on the dodgers.

City Housing Commissioner Peter J. Reidy: "We will give the landlord 30 days—then he will be served with a violation notice."

For the well-housed, the problem is not keeping warm but keeping cool in winter.

The British, brought up in character-forming icy bedrooms, suffer particularly from excessive indoor heating.

But if you are really well-heated (say at the Waldorf Astoria) you live the whole year round, come heatwave, come Arctic snow, at a temperature of 70 to 74 degrees.

STONES thrown by rock 'n' roll yellers yelling "Stoolie, we'll get you!" smashed the windows of the New York home of singer Don Anthony the other night.

Anthony has given evidence against rock 'n' roll spinning disc-jockeys in the current payola scandals. The rioters shouted: "Rock 'n' roll is going to die. You'll die first!"

SEARCH for a producer who will make a film about the end of the world is being made by film director Sir Carol Reed, who arrived in New York recently.

He told me he wants to direct "And the Rock Cried Out," a short story by science fiction writer Ray Bradbury. Said Sir Carol: "Producers are a bit timid about this project."

BIG BROTHER will soon be on duty at the Fort Madison Penitentiary in Iowa. The prison authorities are to install 24 cameras which will keep a 24-hour watch on the prisoners. Each camera will do the work of several warders. It is claimed.

IF the Lord's Day Observance Society ever feels that business is lagging in Britain, it can always open up a branch office in America.

It will be in big business. For the Sunday shopping laws here present a picture of chaos more complicated than the confused British situation.

Some places you can buy beer on Sundays, but not cigarettes. Some places you can buy cigarettes, but you can't get a freshly-baked bread roll.

Recently in New Jersey a referendum was held on the whole question of Sunday shopping laws and about 10 million voters voted that the shops should stay shut.

A lot of shops ignored the law. The police went round handing out summonses. Out of this arises the case of Mr. David H. Foss, owner of a New Jersey floor-covering company, who was arrested on a recent Sunday for selling a roll of linoleum.

Mr. Foss is challenging the law because he is an orthodox Jew. For 14 years he has closed his store on the Jewish Sabbath, between sundown Friday and sundown on Saturday.

"What justice is there in the new law, which forces me to close down on Sunday as well?" asks Mr. Foss.

PRICE suggestion in a Christmas catalogue I received recently from a famous department store in Dallas, Texas: "Let's have a betch party."

Pricey because the list includes (for her) an empress chinchilla, beech wrap, held together by an emerald brooch. For him a pink jeep with a surry-fringed top. And for them both a beach rug in vicuna and a silver champagne bucket.

When the cashier opened the cash register again the customer pulled a gun. "And helped himself to 60 dollars ($21.10s.)

LOOK-AND-LISTEN sunglasses are being sold here. They have a three-translator radio built into the earpiece. Price: 24 dollars 50 cents ($21.15s.).

A BIG motor firm in St. Louis has been broken into six times recently.

So police installed one of the new automatic cameras that takes photos of raiders without their knowing it.

Result: Thieves broke in again last weekend. They stole the camera too.

VIOLENCE belongs to the dark—that is the theory of the New York authorities, who have spent $30,000 dollars ($23,500) installing bright lights in 20 city playgrounds. This follows the gang-murder of two boys in a dimly-lit Manhattan playground recently.

THE PASSENGER warped the taxi-driver: "You could lose your licence for driving like that."

The cabbie grinned and said: "That's okay. I can get it fixed." What the cabbie didn't know was that his fare was a top New York State civil servant, who at once started an investigation.

Result: scandalous revelations in the motor vehicle department. For 100 dollars ($35) a time, corrupt officials have been issuing new documents to cabbies who had their licences revoked by the police.

I TURNED out my pockets and found nine different books of matches.

You're always loading up with them here, because restaurants and hotels supply their own—name-stamped.

This is how some New York wives find out where their husbands have been when they are "working late": This is why a lot of men use lighters.

UP-TO-DATE sign in a New York saloon: "Our bar-tender accepts Payola."

A CHAIN of shoe shops here is trying to bring spats back into favour. And their 1960 word for spats is—oh, dear!—"shoe vests."

THE Bishop of Cork's diocesan could have seen him whipping it up in a night, the other night.

There he was, singing and dancing and not a blush on his face. But there was no shame to it for he was in the best of a c o m p a n y—with Cardinal Cushing, who was doing the same thing.

The excuse, if the Most Reverend Cornelius Lucey needs one when he gets back to Ireland, is that it was all in a good cause—the annual Thanksgiving Day dinner which the cardinal gives in Boston, Massachusetts, to the old and lonely. The night club was loaned as a good-will gesture by the owners.

The bishop and cardinal sang together. "Molly Malone," said the old American favourite. "Take me out to the ball game."

NOTICE in a Government office in Washington: "Executives who have no secretary of their own may take advantage of the girls in the stenographers' pool."

HONEST JOE? A man paid for a cup of coffee in a Baltimore restaurant, then insisted that the cashier had given him too much change.

FOULMOUTH has arranged the discovery of a Rembrandt in the chimney of an empty farmhouse near Cirencester. It may be worth £750,000. An expert who was shown it before anyone knew he was an expert said that it might just as well have been called a Goya, and that he detected, in the lower right-hand corner of the picture, a signature which looked like Harris. Someone had tried to smudge it or rub it out. Suspicion raises its loutish head when one realises that Harris is the name of a novice recently employed by Foulmouth. The fool evidently did not understand that his own name was out of place on a masterpiece by Rembrandt.

Fun at the opera

A SINGER had told how, while playing Carmen in the last act of Bizet's opera, she murmured to Don Jose, "You are four bars behind." He walked off in a rage, taking with him the knife she required for stabbing herself. That Don Jose recalls the tenor who, when Rustiguzzi went clean off the note, stopped to the foot-lights, pointed to her, and shouted, "I ask you!"

A warning

The wisest travellers have always found it a good idea to take a small suitcase with them. That it's the safest plan to have no trunk. With cannibals who invite them to "come round and take pot luck."

DOUBLE THOUGHT
FOR TODAY

Repent therefore of this thy wickedness—Acts 8:22.

Some are completely unconscious of any wickedness, yet it is wicked to throw away food and clothing when men are hungry and cold. To throw away talent when men are ignorant and fearful.

DOBSON WRITES
TO PINCHER....

That moon story has upset Russians

Moscow.

Dear Chapman, REMEMBER that story you wrote about the Russians being able to explode nuclear devices in secret around the far side of the moon?

Well, the Russians are rather angry about it. An article in the Literary Gazette says: "Some English papers like to speak of Mr. Chapman Pincher as the best-informed scientific commentator in Fleet Street. Recently we had one more occasion to convince ourselves that this is no exaggeration."

DOBSON
They say you are...

Chapman Pincher has confirmed brilliantly that his information is far removed from the editorial offices of any English paper. It extends as far as the unseen side of the moon. It is precisely there, according to his opinion, that Russia's greatest perils must be expected.

Imagine what tempting perspectives open up before them. If the cunning Russian intends to hide from control posts behind the dark side of the moon, why not demand the setting up of control posts on the moon?

Why not send Mr. Pincher so that he can uncover the secondarily Russians with his pen? Where commentators like Mr. Pincher see a pretext for sensation, the real scientists only shrug their shoulders. This is just what the American scientists did when they learned of Pincher's commentary.

Well, there you are, Chapman. You are labelled as a cold war warrior, a defender of the atom bomb, something approaching a warmonger. You are treated with sarcasm, pity and contempt.

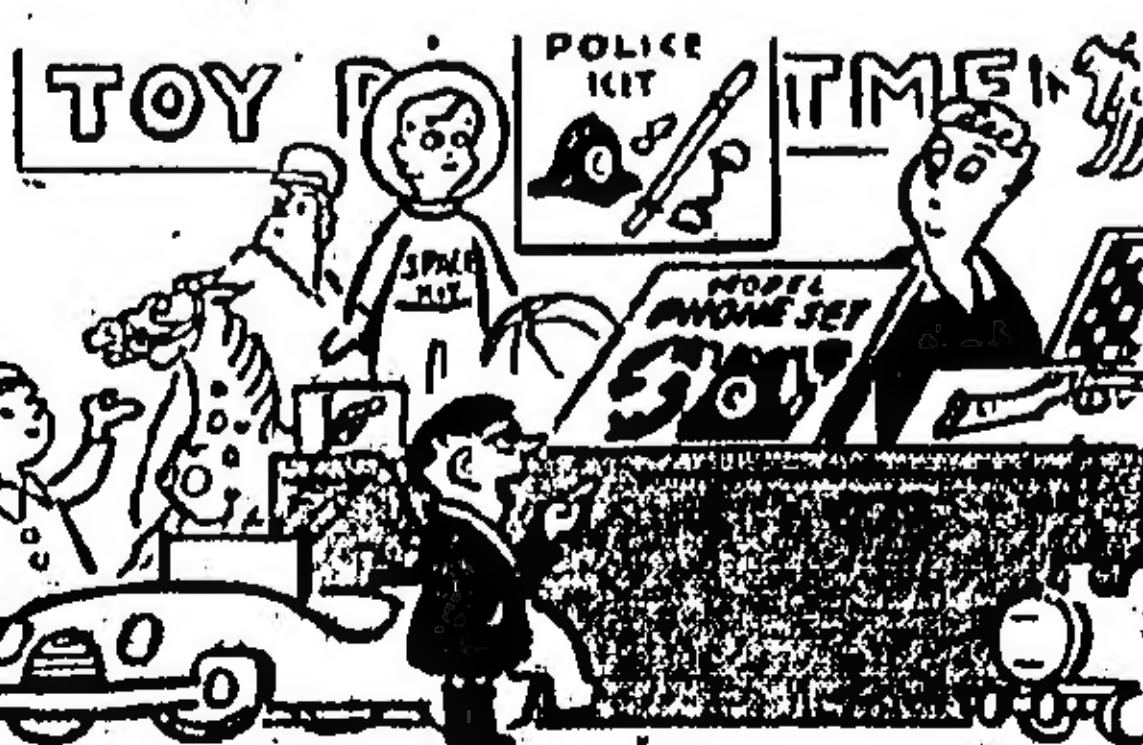

I wonder why you are attacked like this? Could it be that you were getting a little near the knuckle?

Yours sincerely,
Christopher Dobson.

Anne Sharpley at the Toy Fairs

Scared stiff—by a toy elephant...

HE'S TERRIBLY NICE REALLY, BUT OH, THOSE SHRIEKS!

London... I HAVE been looking round the Christmas toy fairs—and have been really rather alarmed.

Not by the new Space Age dimension which children, rather fittingly one feels, have appropriated.

Not even by some rather disquieting items called Teen-age Dolls (for they have not yet reached that peculiar peak they have in New York where they sell "sick" dolls with strips of stick-on chicken-pox and measles).

So macabre...

Even a dancing skeleton and a snake that unwinds from your pocket (don't write in and ask me where you can get them because I'm not going to tell you) seemed all right in a macabre sort of way.

It's the hundreds of battery-driven, over-ingenious, oddities called "mechanical novelties" that worry me.

Like the fishing bear that catches a fish on a magnet and with its torchbulb eyes lighting and uttering a peculiar shrieking noise, proceeds to appear to chew it up.

Then down goes the rod again and it catches another fish, lights up and shrieks—and chews that one up too—or appears to.

On and on it goes, quivering, growling and munching.

In gingham

A fur fabric bear in clothes of ghastly drollery—gingham, straw hat and a bow tie—eating as many fish as its battery-driven appetite allows. Another toy, made in Spain and already sold out, was a large fish pursuing a smaller fish and finally consuming it.

Ugh! Now look at this elephant. It's a terribly nice elephant of grey velvet with a red bulb in the centre of its forehead that lights up like an Indian caste mark.

Uttering a terrible strained trumpeting and dragging its velvet feet along it advances with lifted trunk on a log (made of metal). It has a magnet concealed in its trunk and lifts the log with a shriek of triumph and waves it about, backing.

A small plastic switchboard with a button for forwards and another for switching on the magnet controls this awesome toy.

Who on earth thinks these things up, one wonders? And how could one "play" with such a self-sufficient repetitive, smugly-dotty piece of mechanism?

There was nothing very wrong or cruel about these toys, they were just a bit eerie.

The drinker

And how did the manufacturer achieve these curious combinations? Such as that monkey in a top hat and silk coat pouring out a (brown plastic) bottle of beer in a (white plastic) tankard and lifting and pouring it into its wide open, scarlet-painted mouth. For as long as its torch battery lasted. With its eyes lit up, too.

Was a child supposed to sit for hours watching this misguided animal lifting its elbow and emptying tankards into itself? Just like Daddy? If so, was it a drunkenness or anti-drunkenness device? A few children passed by—giving it barely a glance. But almost every adult stopped and gazed in rapture.

And quite a few adults bought, I noticed.

A small bird in a cage, when wound up, beat in a really rather horrifying imitation of a genuine caged bird, against its yellow plastic bars.

"Doesn't do much except go nuts, does it?" said a small boy, analysing the bird and its dilemma in one quick glance.

Jumped up and down playing a violin. There were others that played the drums and cymbals and maracas. He bought the lot.

Somewhere in a bed-sitter, in Wimbledon one supposes, there are four little bears all playing musical instruments to roars of appreciative laughter from a young man who clearly would not have looked at them twenty years earlier, judging by the fact that when he had them working not a single child glanced at them.

But at least that bubble-blowing elephant has solved one of my Christmas presents. I know it is sure to bring endless gurgling joy. To a lovely young lady—of at least forty.

—(London Express Service).

All for him

"This one absolutely sends me," cried a young man in his thirties, winding up a mechanical bear. He plunked it down on the demonstration table and roared with laughter as the bear

DEPRESSED? THIS WILL HELP

by Dr Gerald Edwards
—talking to Peter Fairley

DEPRESSED? Although most of us are slightly depressed these days most of us can get over it. But one in 10 of us, psychiatrists reckon, will not.

At some point in his life, that person will need treatment. Today comes a new drug which gives him hope.

The drug, imipramine, is achieving spectacular results. It can be swallowed as a pill. In many cases it will remove the need for electrically shocking the brain.

In clinical trials on groups of severely depressed people totalling 1,066, between 63 and 80 per cent either made a complete recovery or showed marked improvement.

Some responded better than they would under electric shock treatment. Most improved equally well.

The drug is most potent against what is called endogenous depression—a feeling of deep and long-lasting despondency which grips a person for no apparent reason.

It has had less effect on reactive depression—the kind that is caused by outside events such as death of a relative or financial worry.

The imipramine pill is made from a chemical compound. It normally takes about three weeks for the treatment to show results.

Hospitals have been using it successfully since January, and it is now available to doctors.

TOO SLOW?

PARENTS often worry because their child is slow in learning to speak. Is he backward? they ask.

Well, Einstein did not speak until he was four. That is not as surprising as it seems. Genius, both mathematical and musical, develops early, but often at the expense of other faculties.

A man in Washington recently could memorise seven lines of seven figures as they were read out to him, and add them up correctly. But otherwise he was regarded as mentally defective.

Learning to speak is not simple. First, you must have good hearing. Second, your brain must develop a centre where sound words can be associated with meaning. Third, this centre must be coaxed to instruct muscles of tongue, mouth and larynx to produce smooth and fluent sounds, saying what YOU mean.

This, known as the "speech centre," is on the left side of the brain in right-handed people, and vice versa in left-handed.

Which is one reason why doctors do not encourage parents to try to make left-handed children use their right. It could have unpleasant consequences.

Parents must talk a lot to their children, to give them plenty of practice. Children of backward parents often get the same label because the grown-ups talk so little or so badly.

In the same way, the youngest child in a family usually talks sooner than the first-born. He has had more practice.

NEW CAMPAIGN

THE British Medical Association is planning a massive anti-polio campaign. It has just sent out 1,000 copies of a neat 16-page booklet on polio to every local authority in Britain.

Questions such as: "Is vaccination likely to be followed by immediate unpleasant reaction?" and "How long will protection last?" are answered simply.

The BMA suggested it might be a useful basis for the authorities' own local campaigns next year. The reaction has been so good that enough copies for the public will now be printed.

LIPSTICK BAN

IF fewer shades of lipstick are on the market soon, women need not worry. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has ordered 17 colours to be removed from the list of ones permitted in the making of lipstick. That's about half the total used. The 17, shades of red, orange and yellow, are made from coal-tar.

There will probably be an appeal. If the order goes through, American firms manufacturing in Britain are likely to obey also.

BUT it's a lot of fuss about very little. The order is based on an American Act which says that any coal-tar colour harmful to animals in large amounts must be banned from human use even in smaller amounts.

Massive doses of the coal-tar dyes were fed to the animals—hundreds or—times greater than any woman, even if she daubed herself 20 times a day, would be likely to lick and swallow in a lifetime. No such law exists in Britain. And British manufacturers are perfectly satisfied with the safety of all colours used.

As the first English reporter to visit the Colomb-Bechar rocket base in more than five years, I was received here with polite surprise, and to put it mildly, caution.

Guarded

The caution went so far as pressing for demands for a cabled confirmation from Paris of my hard-won written authorisation from the Ministries of War and of the Sahara.

The confirmation has now arrived. Soon the heavily guarded gates of an organisation called the United Forces Special Machines Testing Centre will swing open for me.

And the first thing I was told about it was news of Operation Grandeur de France.

Secret

The number of servicemen at Colomb-Bechar is a secret. I can only say it is soaring up to the 10,000 mark and it will probably double that in the next two years.

Tough, brisk air force General Robert Aubiniere, commander of the Colomb-Bechar rocket base, told me: "France wants a modern army, and in Colomb-Bechar she is trying out the weapons which will give her a fairer chance of defending her own soil."

Yes, general—that's true. But here on the desert edge, and away down its distant track to the A-bomb base, something far stronger than weapons is being forced and tested.

It is the pride of the French for France.

ON THE ROAD TO A-BOMB OASIS

From SYDNEY SMITH

Once again one of our correspondents

penetrates a security curtain—this time to report on de Gaulle's Sahara rocket base

Colomb-Bechar

I HAVE reached the last stop before General de Gaulle's atom bomb. This mushrooming rocket town in the Sahara is France's equivalent of Cape Canaveral and Woomera.

It is the last piece of paved civilisation before the road crumbles away into a pebbly beaten—dust track, fading from russet to purple across the horizon, rambling from oasis to oasis—to The Bomb.

Colomb-Bechar and the place it leads to—an insignificant oasis called Reggan where de Gaulle is going to set off his bomb—represent something which France's Western allies are still failing to add up properly.

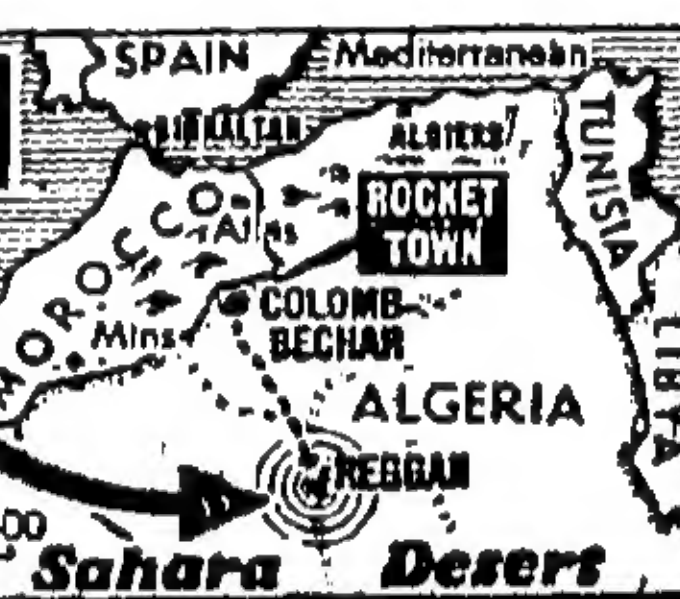

They are symbols of de Gaulle's vast Operation "Grandeur de France"—which means basically the restoration of France's faith in French greatness.

As the first English reporter to visit the Colomb-Bechar rocket base in more than five years, I was received here with polite surprise, and to put it mildly, caution.

The caution went so far as pressing for demands for a cabled confirmation from Paris of my hard-won written authorisation from the Ministries of War and of the Sahara.

The confirmation has now arrived. Soon the heavily guarded gates of an organisation called the United Forces Special Machines Testing Centre will swing open for me.

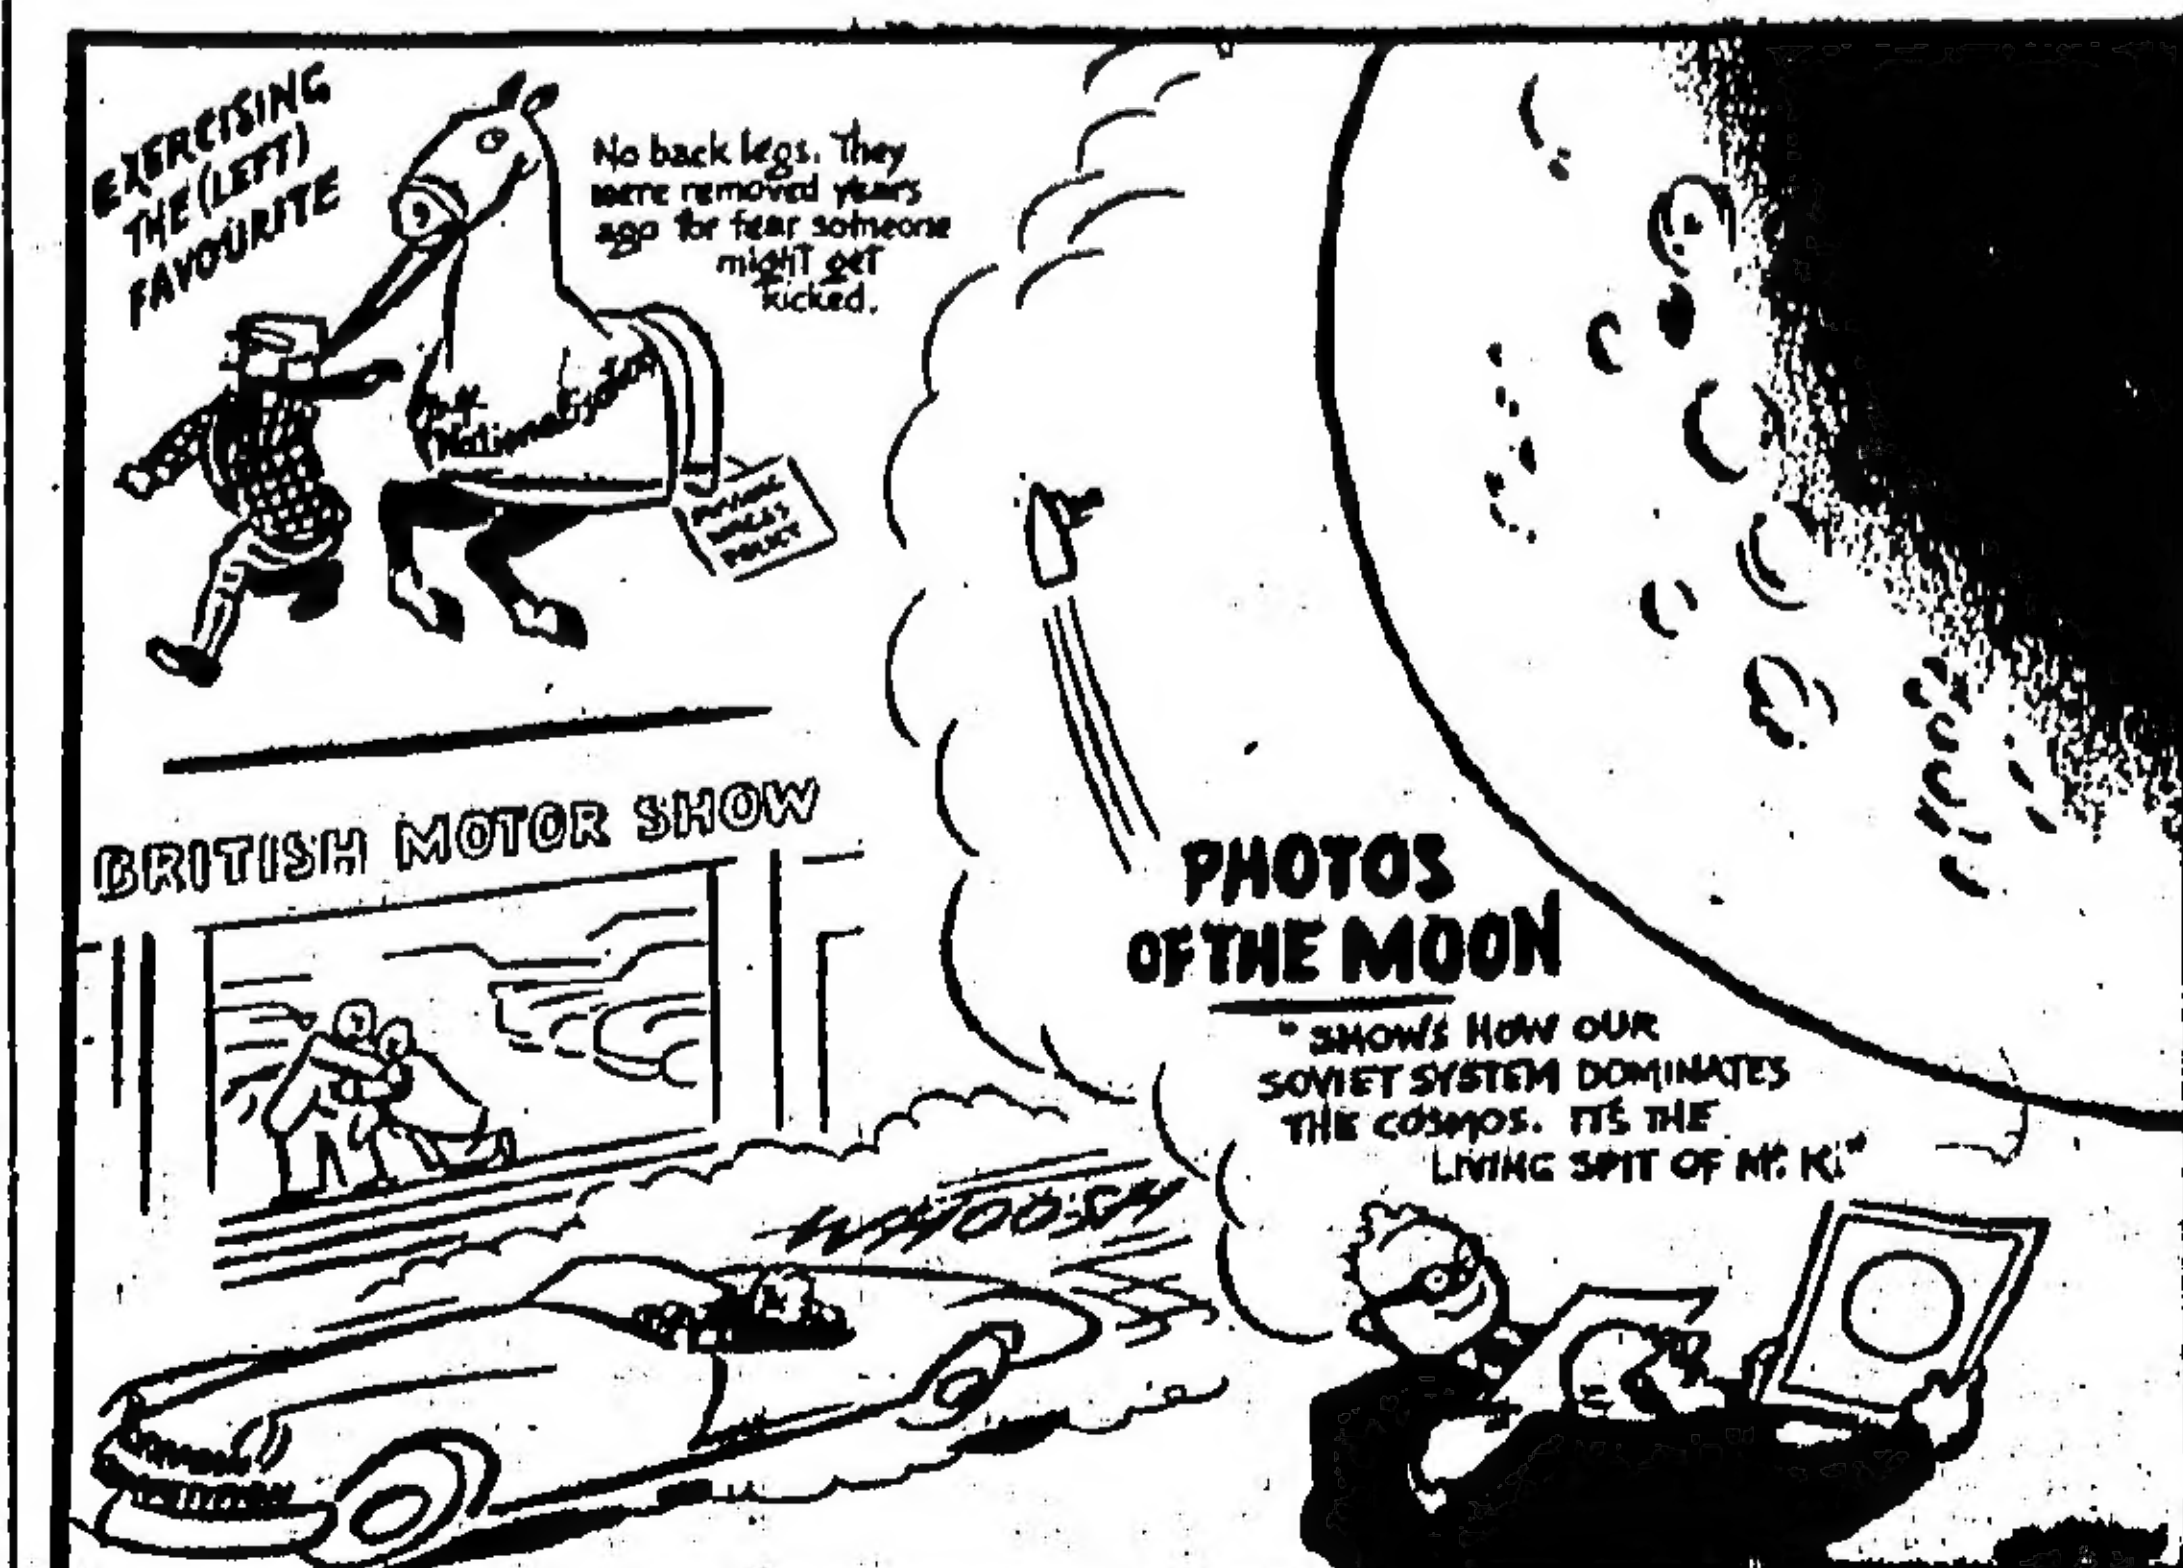

And the first thing I was told about it was news of Operation Grandeur de France.

London Express Service.

A senior officer said: "We are right in the middle of a complete transformation. There is to be a huge expansion for our very ambitious long-term programme."

So Rocket Town is booming. Modern air-conditioned apartments and villas for Servicemen and their families are springing above the dust and rock of this great plateau 2,500ft. up.

Before Rupert can explain, one of the soldiers gives Sailor Sam a nudge and next moment the little monarch moves forward to look at the newsmen. "This is the king," says Rupert. "He ordered these wreaths for us and he's wonderfully friendly now that he has his Whistlefish back again."

And the king shows it by ordering another table and chair and sitting near and chatting endlessly while Sailor Sam also has a royal meal. "Well, this is better than being shut up in that prison," says Sam, "but I wish I could understand what he is saying!"

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

ONCE the homely British boiled cabbage was the laughing stock of Continental cooks. But familiarity has bred ingenuity in the kitchens of foreign embassies in London.

Here is what they do with cabbage—every recipe comes straight from the embassy kitchens. After this, who could talk of cabbage as humdrum?

FRANCE

WASH a firm cabbage carefully so as not to break it. Plunge into boiling water for about one minute then drain. Put a little stuffing inside made with minced beef or veal, with sausage meat. Add salt, pepper, parsley and any herbs you like. Tie the cabbage with fine string.

Put a little butter and one dessertspoonful of flour in an earthenware saucepan and let it brown. Add chopped onion, carrot, and the cabbage. Cook for three hours with the lid on.

Remove string and pass the liquid through a fine sieve and pour over cabbage.

GERMANY

COVER a white cabbage liberally with spices and catenay seed. Pour off the water when nearly cooked and finish simmering in butter.

RUSSIA

DIP white cabbage into boiling water. Cut up cabbage into cutlets. Roll in breadcrumbs mixed with beaten egg. Fry in butter and serve.

GREECE

BOIL lightly with mint, pepper, salt and parsley.

CEYLON

CUT up the cabbage and boil with onions and saffron. Pour off the water and add some fresh coconut milk. Fry some onions until brown. Mix in and serve.

SWITZERLAND

TAKE one finely chopped small cabbage and cook in a minimum of boiling water until soft but still slightly crunchy. Drain well. Line a flat case with thin rolled out short crust and put cabbage in it. Beat up eggs and milk and season well with pepper and nutmeg (very little salt), and pour over the cabbage. Cut some Swiss Gruyere cheese triangles into half and arrange them on top of the flat case, separating them with anchovy fillet. Bake for about 25 minutes in a moderate oven, mark 4.

ISRAEL

CHOP cabbage, sprinkle with salt, pour on boiling water, and leave for a few minutes to drain. Chop one onion, one carrot, two tomatoes, and boil in a little water until tender, then add cabbage. Cover with a lid and leave to simmer. Add more water if necessary. Sprinkle with salt, sugar, and lemon juice to taste.

DENMARK

BOIL cabbage lightly. Serve with a good white sauce with plenty of seasoning poured over it.

BELGIUM

PREPARE cabbage by cutting off all the stalk and leaving only the leaves. Boil quickly and pour off the water. Rinse in cold water. Put back into pan and simmer in butter, adding salt and nutmeg, for 25 minutes with the lid off.

BURMA

BOIL cabbage in oil and water mixed with meat or fish. Pour off the liquid. Serve mixed with fried prawns. London Express Service.

ANNE'S FASHION IDEAS ARE BASED ON COMMON SENSE

By CLARE YOUNG

IF you asked fashion designer ANNE KLEIN the secret of her success she'd tell you: "Work at something you really enjoy; you're bound to reach the top."

Anne, who has collected five major fashion awards was born in New York City and admits that she spent most of her childhood drawing rather than studying.

Even as a child, she would sketch designs for her own dresses which her mother would make on the family sewing machine.

Anne's interest in junior clothes lasted a long, long time, however. She is only five foot tall today, at 35 years of age! As every petite woman will agree, the only styles offered to five footers are junior styles—regardless of the age of the five footer!

MADE HER NAME

So Anne decided to do something about the situation. Since 1950 she has been busy revolutionising junior size clothes, changing fussy frills to elegant simplicity, ensuring that petite women can walk into a store and buy a sophisticated style in a small size. And it is in this much-neglected sphere that she has made her name.

Anne's ideas on fashion are based on common sense. When with U.S. stage and screen star Rosalind Russell, she received the ebony and silver accolade

"for distinguished service in the field of fashion," she was asked for advice on how to dress, she said simply: "Wear what makes you an individual."

She never pursues a new design until she senses that her public is ready to accept it. Her fabric and colour combinations have been prophetic. Upsetting conventions, she has combined wool jersey and satin, heavy tweed with velvet, and even paired corduroy with satin!

DEEP THINKER

Today, thanks to Anne's efforts, short women can find not only dresses, suits and coats to fit them—in fashion styles—but beachwear, lingerie and shoes.

What is she like, this successful designer? She is a modern, but she thinks very deeply. She loves contemporary furnishings, but cannot resist period pieces. In her Manhattan apartment she stores "travel nonsense," objects and objects d'art she has brought home from her travels.

Anne has a beach house too, and it is here that she delights in being unconventional. The house is decorated in hot pink and orange; the hammock is in the living room, and in the same room you'll find a swing—and a full fledged palm tree!

CHILDREN'S CORNER

Lucky Road's Clovers

—Knarf Finds They All Have Four Leaves—

By MAX TRELL

"I DON'T suppose," said Christopher Cricket as he came over to the fence where Knarf and Hanid, the Shadow Children, were sitting, "that you'd like to take a walk with me."

It was a beautiful day. The sky was pure blue. The birds were singing. The bees were humming.

Will Play Guitar

"And if you take this walk with me," Christopher went on, "I'll play on my guitar all the time we walk."

Then Christopher took the guitar off his back and tuned the strings and strummed out a few happy chords.

"Of course we'll take a walk with you, Christopher," said Hanid.

"Where will we go?" asked Knarf.

"Well," said Christopher as he stopped strumming his guitar and thought for a moment or two, "I know a wonderful little road where I'm sure you've never been."

Walked All Roads

"Oh, we've walked on all the roads in this whole neighbourhood," said Hanid. "We've been down every street, across every avenue, all the way from here to the white church that stands on the hill and to the bridge that crosses the river."

"The road I'm taking you on," said Christopher, "isn't nearly as far as that. It's right over there," he said.

He pointed to a tiny little path no wider than a wagon wheel which ran from the end of the garden to a hedge a little way off.

"Why," said Knarf, "that whole road is only a few yards long, Christopher! That's not very much of a walk."

Lucky Road

Christopher smiled. "It isn't how long a road is, but how pleasant it is that makes it a good place to walk on. That's Lucky Road."

At this, both Knarf and Hanid asked why Christopher's road was called Lucky Road.

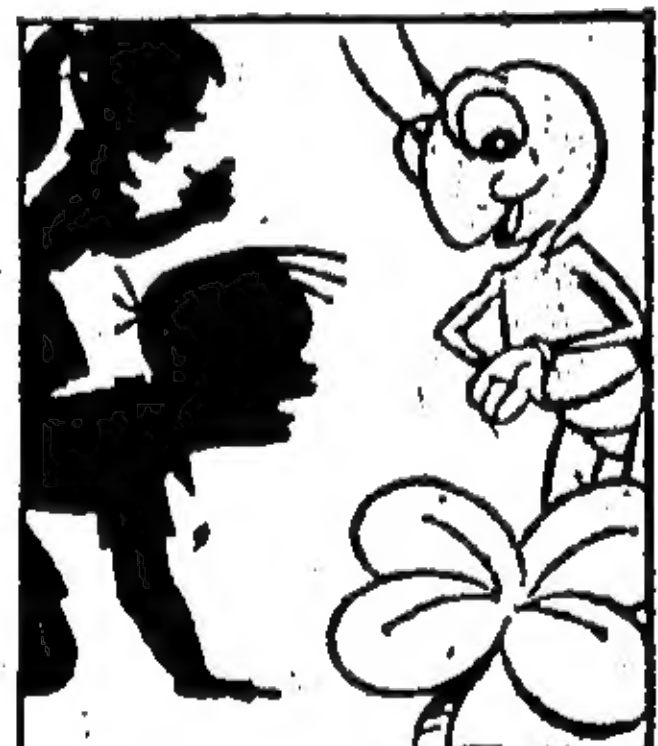

"Just come along with me and you'll see," said Christopher Cricket.

Then Christopher began strumming his guitar in good earnest. He marched ahead, jauntily, like a happy soldier.

Knarf and Hanid trooped after him. They kept in step with the beat of his music.

By and by Knarf and Hanid and Christopher Cricket reached the end of the garden where Christopher Cricket's Lucky Road began. Again Christopher Cricket led the way.

Pointed To Something Suddenly Christopher Cricket stopped. He pointed to something growing at the side of the road.

"See anything different about it?" asked Chris.

"That's one of the reasons it's called Lucky Road," he said.

At first neither Knarf nor Hanid knew what Christopher Cricket meant, but the successful combination of marriage and scholarship.

Little Clover

"All I see is a little clover," said Hanid.

"Better take a close look at it," said Christopher.

Knarf dropped down to his knees. He looked very closely at the clover.

"See anything different about it?" asked Christopher Cricket.

"No, I don't," said Knarf. "Count the leaves," said Christopher.

"Four leaves," began Knarf. "Then he let out a shout. 'Four! It's got four leaves! It's a four-leaf clover!'"

"That," said Christopher Cricket, "is why it's called Lucky Road. You can hunt high and you can hunt low, but you can't find many roads in this whole wide world that have four-leaf clovers growing on them."

Then Christopher sat down in the shade of the four-leaf clover and sang a song. "The song had only two lines: 'You may search the whole world over, and never find a four-leaf clover.'"

HOW TO BE HAPPY ON £4 A WEEK

—Take A Lesson From The Undergrad's Wife

LIMELIGHT on young marriages came from an unexpected quarter this week when some Oxford undergraduates formed the first Married Students Association.

No one, it seemed, had the faintest idea that the undergraduate—traditionally sowing his wild oats—was getting to be a responsible family man.

Said one Oxford don: "There may be some married men among my students. It never really occurred to me to ask. The only way one can judge if these young marriages are a success as far as the colleges are concerned is to study their examination results."

The organisers

At Oxford I met 22-year-old Colin Dawson, a student of modern languages, and his 20-year-old ex-undergraduate wife Billie, who are organising the Association.

Their seven-week-old son, Steve, was with a neighbour. Waiting in a hotel lounge, I picked out Dawson as soon as he entered. Pale and serious, a prototype of the modern grammar school undergraduate.

He was wild haired and trim, and looked more the type for putting the world to rights than for finding flats and baby sitters.

His wife, in pony tail, duffle coat and college scarf, was in that rosy post-natal haze where the only reality is the new baby.

She was a natural science student at St Hugh's, but left University before graduating.

"Well, there was a bit of a row," she said. "They kept telling me how much I would regret it. But I haven't. Not yet, anyway."

"She had it a bit soft, of course," said her husband. "Her father gave her far too big an allowance. She didn't know what it was to struggle."

He seemed satisfied that the allowance had stopped on their marriage.

A pioneer

WE were joined by the Glendinning, active sympathiser of the Association. Thirty-year-old Nigel Glendinning is Dawson's tutor.

Because he was expecting a 3,000-word essay from his student in two hours' time while Billie was worrying about the two school fees, we were preoccupied into the dining room while less burdened students were still busying themselves at the bar.

Vicky Glendinning, 22-year-old, mother of a four-month-old baby, turned out to be another pioneer.

She married while still a student and graduated before the birth of her baby and is much quoted among undergraduates as the successful combination of marriage and scholarship.

The mothers, including me, settled down to enjoy a lunch not cooked by themselves while don and student discussed flat accommodation and baby services.

"There must be at least 60 married undergraduates at Oxford who are cramped in expensive beds—sitters while suitable flats are occupied by bachelors," said Nigel Glendinning.

"The trouble is that Oxford landladies are not used to students with wives and babies," he said.

"Mostly," said Colin Dawson, "the University authorities treat our problems with utter disbelief or indifference. Really Dawson, I can hardly credit that these are married students with families at this University."

His grant

I returned to the Dawson's a pleasant two-roomed flat, one mile away from the College Centre, where Mr. Dawson got down to his essay while his wife retrieved her baby from a green-stuffed friend.

OTHER WOMEN'S LIVES

by Maureen Owen

microscope, which gave us a bit of capital to draw on. But we invested most of it in two bicycles and a side-car for the baby so that we can cycle to my parents' home in Sussex for an occasional holiday.

"We don't go to many of the drinking and dancing parties now. There never was much dancing anyhow, but people drop in on us just the same. I give them coffee or they bring a bottle."

"Some of Colin's friends make cracks about nappies and so on but they're always in such a state with their love lives (there aren't enough girls to go round, of course) that we can afford to laugh right back."

"Neither of us feels that we are missing anything at all. I can recommend young marriages every time."

Dramatic End To Cricket Interport

NAGAIH, SCHUBERT TAKE MALAYA TO VICTORY WITH LAST-WICKET STAND

By ROBERT TAY

Hongkong's two-week Festival of Cricket could not have come to a more fitting close than it did yesterday when the "glorious uncertainty of cricket" was demonstrated in full measure.

Even the most optimistic of the Malayan team's supporters would have given Malaya but the remotest chance of pulling off their third successive post-war interport cricket victory over Hongkong when their last two batsmen Stan Nagaiah and Carl Schubert went in to bat. At that stage the Malaysians were still 90 runs behind Hongkong's score and there was still more than half a day to go.

But fortune favoured the brave.

Determined that even in defeat Malaya would not go down tamely but gloriously, Stan Nagaiah followed the footsteps of his side's other tail-enders, Koyy Khoo-leong and Gurucharan Singh. He drove, lifted, hooked and slashed at everything that came his way. His shots not only connected with constant regularity but were also sending the ball past the boundary line at regular intervals.

Taking courage from the fact that the ones which he did not connect with well were falling either short of the fielders or beyond them, and that the Hongkong players were showing signs of the three days' wear and tear he moved steadily on his path of courage and with insistent twos and fours gradually took the Malaysians' score past the 200 mark, then the 210, the 220, the 230 and players surged in to share their two heroes of the match, Nagaiah and Schubert.

For Stan Nagaiah, it was undoubtedly one of the most memorable events in his cricket career. Almost single-handedly he had won the game for Malaya. He had made the highest score in his career and also played the longest time ever at the crease—105 minutes for his 81 not out, which concluded 13 fours.

Commenting on how he felt after his heroic effort, the modest Nagaiah, chosen for his pace-bowling had only this to say: "It is one of those days where you can't do anything wrong. I was seeing the ball very well, but if you ask me to do it again I'll never be able to. You know, I lost my pulse before the match and I think it brought me good luck."

Bitter Pill

For the Hongkong players the defeat must have been a bitter pill to swallow. They put up the best game that they have done after the war, in fact far beyond expectations.

But yesterday they probably paid the penalty of being overconfident. With victory almost certain, they relaxed their concentration on their fielding. A couple of the chances given could have been taken had they really tried hard.

But all in all, the 22 players who took part in this year's interport match are to be congratulated for the glorious cricket that they have put up during the three days during which they have shown, in the words of Hongkong's Mr. Cricket, Alice Pearce "that's the way with cricket."

D'Amato To Go On Trial Tomorrow

New York, Dec. 14. The trial of Cus D'Amato, manager of former world heavyweight boxing champion Floyd Patterson, for failing to answer a subpoena from the New York State Attorney General was today postponed to Wednesday.

D'Amato did not appear on November 18 as scheduled before Louis Lefkowitz, the Attorney General, who is conducting one of the investigations of the promotion of the June 26 world heavyweight championship fight between Patterson and Sweden's Ingemar Johansson.

D'Amato was subsequently arrested and then released on bail. His hearing was originally set for today but the Attorney General postponed it to Wednesday after Edwin Schweigh, D'Amato's lawyer, asked that it be put back two weeks.

Meanwhile D'Amato is to appear tomorrow before the New York State Supreme Court for annulment of the New York State Athletic Commission's recent decision to revoke his manager's licence.

Halimi Outpoints Meunier In A Disappointing Fight

Paris, Dec. 14. French bantamweight boxer Alphonse Halimi, making his first ring appearance since he lost the world title to Mexico's Jose Becerra last July, scored his second points win over 10 rounds against compatriot Robert Meunier here tonight.

Halimi beat Meunier on a decision in another Paris non-title fight in October 1958. Halimi wisely felt the inertia of his too-long inactivity and disappointed the large crowd gathered at the Salle Wagram to see him. The blows of the boxer from Constantine, Algeria, often lacked precision and he seemed to have little conviction. Meunier, who had an almost three-kilowatt edge on the former world champion, fought mostly a defensive bout and was mainly concerned in keeping his distance.

Halimi is to box a yet unnamed opponent, probably on December 28, before his return world title bout with Becerra. Asked as to the date of this bout, Halimi's manager Philip said, "It will probably be held

MCC Leave For WI Tour

The MCC team left Paddington Station, London, last week en route for Avonmouth, Bristol, for the commencement of their 1959-1960 West Indian tour under the captaincy of Surrey's Peter May. All members of the team selected are under the age of 30.

Forgot To Post Winning Pools Coupon

Salisbury, Dec. 14. Two men here are recovering from the nightmare of filling in their first football coupon — which would have won them £264,000 — only to find they had forgotten to post it.

For three days they made plans on how they were going to spend their fortune, while their telegram asking for confirmation of their win was reported to have thrown a big English football pools firm into a panic as they tried to trace the winning coupon.

Then on the third day, Mr Jack Bell, a clerk in the same office as his fellow "winner," Mr Jack McPherson, was sorting through the files on his desk, when he found the familiar envelope and their castles in the air came tumbling down.

But despite everything, Mr Bell said: "we are still the best of friends." — China Mail Special.

The Thai sprinter's performance was the only one which broke any known record. Host country Thailand, which has the largest contingent, has so far amassed 13 SEAP Games gold and 11 silver medals.

Burma has collected four gold, three silver and five bronze medals while Malaya has captured three gold, five silver and four bronze. Singapore has got three gold, one silver and three bronze. South Vietnam has won two silver and two bronze and Laos which sent the smallest delegation has so far none.

Tennis

In tennis women's singles Mrs Sanguan Sucharitakul, Thailand won first place by defeating another Thailand player Miss Phanow Suddaswadi 6-2, 8-6. Both Thai players respectively defeated Malayan opponents yesterday.

In men's singles quarter-finals Vietnam's Vo Van Bay beat Malaya's Tan Song-kean 6-0, 6-3. Singapore's Ong Chew-bee defeated Vietnam's Vo Van Thanh in a hard fought match 7-9, 7-5, 6-3.

Vietnam's Lau Hoang Van lost to Thai Suthep Bulakul 2-6, 4-6 while Burma's Joe Ba Meung was overwhelmed by Thailand's Sutiraphan Karalak 0-6 and 1-6.—AP.

Football

Bangkok, Dec. 14. Vietnam today defeated Burma 3-0 after a goalless first half in the SEAP Games football championship.

Vietnam, who trounced Thailand 4-0 last night, had to fight hard to conquer Burma, who were edged out yesterday by Malaya by a one goal margin. Both teams played virile soccer and were on the offensive right from the beginning. Vietnam was noted for their precision passing and fast movement while the Burmese excelled in strategy. The Burmese forwards, however, lacked sting in their shooting.

In the second game of the night Thailand surprisingly defeated Malaya 3-1 after their being level at one goal each at half-time.

MR. C. S. WANG ANNOUNCES:

ASIAN CUP WEST, EAST, CENTRAL ZONE SIDES TO PLAY IN. MALAYA

Ernakulam, Dec. 14. A representative side from the West Zone of the Asian Cup soccer tournament may visit Malaya next June to meet sides from the tournament's Central and East Zones.

This was announced here today by Mr. C. S. Wang, chairman of the Asian All-Star team selection committee. He said the West Zone team would either be announced at the end of the current West Zone tournament or forwarded to the Asian Football Confederation.

The four countries competing in the West Zone competition are India, Persia, Israel and Pakistan.

Foreign Teams

Mr. Wang, who is also chairman of the Hongkong Football Association, also said that the Asian Football Confederation proposed to invite leading teams from Europe and South America to tour the three zones as a move towards raising the standard of the sport in Asia.

The first step, he said, would be a visit to Hongkong next January by a combined Desportive Municipal and Sports Boys Club team from Peru. Mr. Wang left this afternoon for Australia and New Zealand by the Peruvian team.

Sheffield Shield Cricket

Melbourne, Dec. 14.

An unbeaten innings of 93 by opening batsman Ray Reynolds helped Queensland lead Victoria by 177, with two second innings wickets down, at the end of the third day's play in their Sheffield Shield match here.

Reynolds batted patiently for four hours 16 minutes and hit six fours, after Queensland had lost their first two wickets for 63 runs. He was stoutly assisted by Jack McLaughlin, who hit 52 not out in two hours 16 minutes with the aid of two boundaries.

Victorian opening batsman John Shaw, nephew of former Australian Test Captain Lindsay Hassett, scored 87 not out and enabled his team to declare with a first innings lead of one run. Bailing for just over four hours, he hit four boundaries.

Scores were: Queensland 203 and 178 for two; Victoria 204 for eight declared.—China Mail Special.

NSW IN GRIM BATTLE

Perth, Dec. 14. New South Wales, the Sheffield Shield holders, face a grim battle to avoid defeat by Western Australia in their Shield match here.

They were forced to follow on today, and at the end of the day, were still 270 runs behind with one second innings wicket down. The four-day match ends tomorrow.

Facing Western Australia's mammoth first innings total of 487 for four declared, New South Wales were dismissed for 172 and lost one second innings wicket for 45 runs by the close.

Hostile and intelligent bowling backed by shrewd captaincy, helped Western Australia gain their strong position. Their opening attack of Ray Strauss and Ron Gaunt had most of the New South Wales batsmen in difficulties and both bowlers took three wickets, Strauss for 47 runs and Gaunt for 23. The Shield holders' best partnership was 55 in 103 minutes by Ray Flockton (60) and G. Thomas (33). — China Mail Special.

Hurst Park To Become A Housing Estate

London, Dec. 14. Hurst Park, one of London's best-known recreances, may become a housing project if plans approved by its shareholders are passed by the town planning authorities. The shareholders in the Hurst Park Syndicate Limited have agreed to their directors' proposals to enter into an agreement with a firm of building contractors.

If planning permission is granted, a new development company will be formed. Development would begin at the end of the 1960 racing season and would probably take up to five years to complete.

The chairman of the contracting firm said that plans included sites for churches, schools, shops and playing fields as well as houses of all types. Special attention would be given to preserving existing amenities.—China-Mail Special.

WEEKEND RUGBY

LATE RALLY FAILS TO SAVE POLICE FROM SURPRISING DEFEAT BY LANCS

By PAK LO

Lazing along in the second half of their rugby game against the Lanes at Stanley on Saturday, the Police suddenly found themselves facing a six point deficit, and though they rallied back, they still went down to the Lanes by eight points (one goal, one try) to nine points (two tries, one penalty goal).

In the other matches the results were expected. Club were never in any danger against 1st Tanks and won easily by 29 points (four goals, two tries, one penalty goal) to three points (one penalty goal). Club "B" just managed to get the better of 49 Field Regiment in a scrappy match by nine points (three penalty goals) to nil.

It is also reported that on Friday the alarm from Little Sai Wan recorded their first victory, and that by a considerable margin, over HMS Cardigan Bay, the score being 32 points (four goals, four tries) to nil.

There are two touring teams scheduled to appear in the lists from other parts of the world in the near future.

On December 30, the Far East Air Force team will play the Combined Services on the Club ground at 7.15 p.m., and the two RAF games for that day have to be postponed.

On Saturday, January 2, the Singapore Combined Services will face the HK Selection on the Club ground at 4.30 p.m., the Club "B" versus RAF "B" game being cancelled, and on Monday, January 5, the Singapore Combined Services will face the Colony at 7.00 p.m. on the Club ground.

Two Good Games

The Combined Services team is reported to be very strong, and should provide two really good games, while the Far East Air Force, though not quite as strong as the Singapore detachment, is reportedly not far behind in strength.

To date there is no news of the Taiwan tour, which is roughly arranged for February, but it is hoped more details of this will be forthcoming in the near future.

The Club rugby section is holding a special meeting on Monday evening for February, but it is hoped more details of this will be forthcoming in the near future. All players are expected to attend.

Police v. Lanes

The Police three in the first half should have scored a dozen times, for they got a steady supply of the ball, and their passing was excellent, but the centres would not draw their man before they passed with the result that the wings were continually smothered.

The Police halves could not find the gap in the centre as Davies, playing a very nice game throughout at inside centre for the Lanes, kept close to his stand-off, who in turn kept close to his scrum-half, thus covering the centre of the field to such an extent that there was no possibility of a breakthrough. But this left the wings wide open and the Police should have poured through the space remaining.

Amble

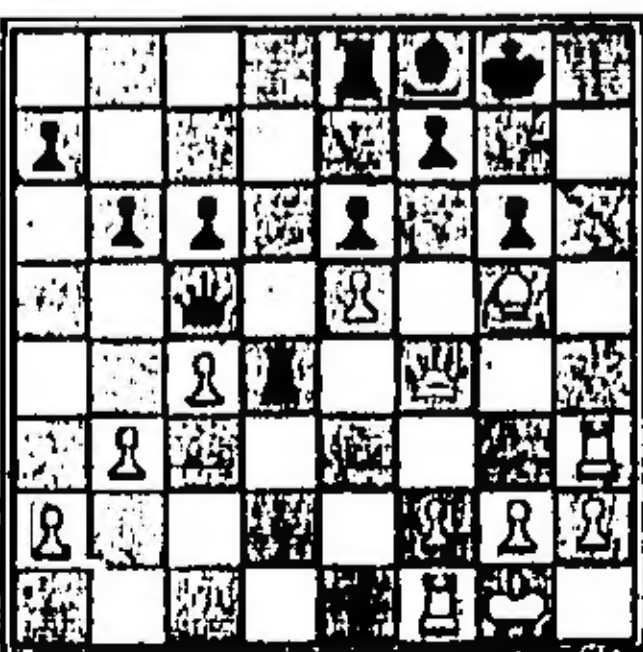

In the second half the Police pack, although they were drawn at 3-3, amble on to the field and ambled their way through the rest of the game, thus taking the pressure off the Lanes forwards, who until then had been completely dominated. With their forwards getting the ball, the Lanes went into the lead, and held it to the end.

FREDDIE TRUEMAN — ENGLAND'S MOST HOSTILE SPEED MERCHANT SINCE LARWOOD

Frederick Seward Trueman—"Fiery Freddie" to the fans—is England's most hostile speed merchant since Harold Larwood terrorised batsmen with his thunderbolts in the 1930's.

He has the same marathon run-up and smooth gathering of speed, the same stocky build and liveliness with the new ball. Similarly, his fierce bowling and outpocketness have made him a controversial figure in the cricket world.

But Trueman has enjoyed far greater success in Test cricket than Larwood. Only eight bowlers have taken more wickets for England and in 1952 he set up a record by taking eight wickets for 31 runs in one innings against India.

It was during this period that the Tanks scored their consolation penalty goal.

Incidentally, mention must be made of the fact that the game started 22 minutes late, due to some transport breakdown by the Tanks lorry.

Oliver had quite a good game for the Tanks at scrum-half but the Tanks' passing in the centre was indifferent, and they never looked dangerous.

Shone

Of the Club players it is hard to pick out any outstanding players beyond Johnson, though Penman shone in the loose.

Lochie was never in trouble at full-back, and Watson had one glorious run from his own 25 to outpace the defence and score under the posts. This ruined Watson who was only capable of short bursts thereafter.

The Tanks centres were inclined to hang on to the ball when they got it and try and make breaks through the centre. This let them into the arms of the Club pack who quickly settled their hash.

The first score came after Club pressure which resulted in a penalty to the Tanks. The ball went straight to Lochie who came up and then sent Utley, Steven and Campbell off. The latter was caught but Johnson who was outside him took the pass and touched down well out. No conversion. 3-0.

Next to score was Watson from a very nice cross-kick by

It was a brilliant start to his Test career, but his progress was then retarded by National Service. He played in only one Test against Australia in 1953 and enjoyed little success on the following tour of the West Indies.

Century Of Wickets

Trueman had an excellent season in 1955, taking 153 first-class wickets at an average of 16.07 apiece. Yet he did not regain a regular berth in the England team until 1957 when he played in all five Tests against the West Indies.

This year he has passed his century in Test wickets and was again the most successful bowler against the Indians, taking 24 wickets in five Tests. He finished the season with 140 wickets (average 19.50).

Born at Stainton, near Doncaster, on February 6, 1931,

Trueman had a comparatively tough upbringing. One of seven children of a coal-miner, he left school at 14 to work in a factory and later went into the mines.

His father, a keen local cricketer, encouraged him as a fast bowler and he received special coaching from the age of 16 when he attracted attention by his sensational performances in club cricket. He was 18 when he made his Yorkshire debut.

Sheer Guts

Sheer guts have taken Freddie to the top-flight of cricket. As a schoolboy he underwent hospital treatment for 18 months following a groin injury. But he kept up his interest in the game by scoring and umpiring and he has never stopped fighting to develop his speed and accuracy.

Naylor, and again there was no conversion. 6-0.

Lovely Movement

This was followed by a really lovely interpassing movement starting in the Club three, with Wiggitt making the break, which was carried on by the Club forwards with Williams finally touching down under the posts, after the ball had been handled by Campbell, Penman and Johnson. Wiggitt converted. 11-0.

In the second half a nice break by Tancock from the base of the scrum sent Williams away with Campbell finishing off. Wiggitt hit the upright and the ball bounced in. 16-0.

Watson next did his solo run again and Wiggitt converted. 24-0. Club's final score came from a nice three move which gave Wiggitt a try and another conversion.

Club crept up and the Tanks, going downfield, were awarded a penalty 20 yards from the line. Foster converted. 29-3.

Club 'B' v. 49

Field Regiment

The Club's passing in this game was non-existent, but their pack dominated the line-outs and won the majority of the scrums, while the Club three were very steady in defence, especially Ikenman on the wing.

The Gunners passed weakly in the centre, and even with Buss coming up time and again to make the extra man, the Gunners threw away their chances.

Gomersall had a good game in defence and attack, but there was not enough support.

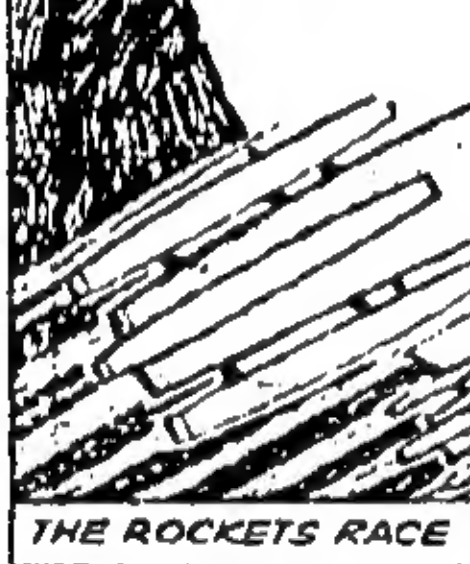

The Club wings may have been great in attack, but they were never in action due mainly to Club's stand-off who would not look at his man before passing, and seldom threw close to him except by accident.

The Club showed a slight improvement in the second half, and on that and the hard work put in by their pack they deserved victory. Hutt converted all three penalty attempts, none of which was easy.

Barnett at full-back for the Club "B" was very good, and he had plenty of practice, though he needs to learn to kick with his right as well as his left foot. This was his only weakness.

DRIVING SUSPENSION APPEAL

Time Reduced From Year To 3 Months

Mr Justice J. R. Gregg, Senior Puisne Judge, at the Appeals Court this morning reduced the disqualification imposed on Chow Fu for careless driving from one year to three months, to commence from the date of conviction in October.

Mr Justice Gregg, however, ordered the endorsement of Chow's driving licence and ordered the original fine of $160 for the offence to stand.

He said he reduced the period of disqualification, having regard to the fact that the nature of the careless driving was not very serious and the fact that the Crown had conducted the magistrates' case very well in taking into account Chow's five previous convictions for obstruction when imposing the penalty.

Mr C. H. Wong, who appeared for Chow, submitted that the magistrate was wrong to take into account of Chow's five convictions and another five of carrying excess passengers. He also submitted that the disqualification was unduly harsh as Chow earned his living by driving a goods van.

Chow had a wife and three young children to support, Mr Wong added.

Mr Justice Gregg observed that Chow had had a total of 11 previous convictions for traffic offences within a period of six months.

Chow had pulled out in between two stationary buses in Shanghai Street and collided with another car which had come from behind. The incident occurred in September.

Catholic Bishop Thanks Colony

A high ranking Roman Catholic bishop today paid tribute to the Hongkong Government for co-operation given to missionaries.

He is Msgr. Caprio, who left Hongkong today by air for Taipei.

Msgr. Caprio said on his departure that he realised that the vast work of the Catholic Church had only been made possible by the understanding and help of the Hongkong Government.

AMAZED

He also officially thanked the Governor, Sir Robert Black, for the work that has been done for the refugees.

Msgr. Caprio, who is the Apostolic Internuncio to Nationalist China, added that he was amazed by the progress of the Catholic Church in Hongkong.

"Everywhere I found new schools, refugee welfare centres and a true spirit of faith," he said.

"I am very inspired to see such growth in the Church of Hongkong."

"Apparently it is closely following the pattern of Formosa where there are now 160,000 practising Catholics compared to only 5,000 a few years ago," he added.

Young Girls Injured

An eight-year-old girl, Leung Kwok-kan of 69 Pokfulam Road, second floor, was knocked down and injured by a car in Bonham Road near Pokfulam Road at about 8 a.m. yesterday.

Another girl, Li Chi-kan, aged 11 of 11 Gresson Street, third floor, was knocked down by a private car in Hennessy Road near its junction with Fenwick Street.

Both girls were admitted to Queen Mary Hospital for treatment.

Colony To Have Self-Rule?

New York, Dec. 14. Mr Iain Macleod, new British Colonial Secretary, plans to end colonial rule "throughout the British Empire within no more than four years," Newsweek magazine reported today.

The magazine's periscope column said that this was the message Macleod gave to political leaders during last week's tour to Malta and British territories in Africa.

"Some twenty colonies regarded as too small or weak to full independence will become 'self-governing' territories within the Commonwealth," Newsweek said.

These will include Gibraltar, Mauritius, Hongkong, Full, British Honduras and British Guiana.—UPI.

Car Park And Playground In Garden Road

Work was started early this month on the construction of a car park at the back of YWCA, Macdonnell Road.

With access to Macdonnell and Garden Roads, the car park will have a capacity for more than 60 vehicles.

It was proposed that a filling station be built on the site.

Northeast of the car park up to Kennedy Road will be a children's playground equipped with swings, slides, merry-go-round and scaffolding structure on two plots of grass.

The parking space and the playground will cover an area about 800 feet long by 150 feet wide, running from Macdonnell Road to Kennedy Road.

The foundation work includes covering this section of Albany nullah and raising the ground level.

The construction company expects to complete the job in nine months—the car park will be in use next August.
